HEALTH AND WELLNESS CLUB [IX-XI]

Importance of Open Communication with Parents during Adolescence This week in the Health and Wellness Club an open discussion was initiated by class IX and XI students. Adolescents were more likely to communicate with parents who understand them well; as a result, they get more guidance, involvement, and protection from their parents. Communication between adolescents and parents is one of the most difficult things in the realm of family relationships. Adolescents in the teen stage begin to explore and experiment with their own identities, and that can sometimes cause a shift in the parent-adolescent relationship. And this is exactly what happened during the discussion. All the students shared incidents when they tried to communicate with their parents openly but they failed. On the other side of the coin, there were students who were comfortable sharing everything with their parents. In the later part of the discussion, students were suggested to work on building strong interpersonal relationships by being empathetic towards their parents also.
